[Operator Instructions] Your first question today comes from the line of Magdalena Stoklosa from Morgan Stanley.

Magdalena Stoklosa -- Morgan Stanley -- Analyst

I've got two questions, and they're both on the deleveraging particularly, kind of quarter-on-quarter. So really, my first question is about the Investment Bank because, of course, you have kind of shown higher, I suppose, deleveraging numbers than we expected. And of course, part of it or a large part of it was Prime Services. But is there any other kind of some business line or any other, yes, business that you would like to highlight from the perspective of the residual of that deleveraging to be coming from?

And my second question is really around the risk-weighted assets fall quarter-on-quarter also within wealth. We have seen your risk-weighted assets coming down. We have seen your loans coming down quarter-on-quarter, particularly in APAC as well. Could you give us a sense what was happening kind of there apart from your kind of derisking that you have mentioned?

And then so could you give us a sense, when you talk about this reduction in risk appetite currently, what does it actually mean? What sort of constraints are you operating on from a risk perspective?

David Mathers -- Group Chief Financial Officer

Thank you very much, Magdalena, and thank you very much for the question. I think in terms of deleveraging, the primary focus was the resizing of the prime business within the Investment Bank. And as you know, it was partly offset by an increase in HQLA, but there's nothing else particularly to highlight, Magdalena.

I think in terms of risk-weighted assets, within -- across the bank overall, I'd just refer you

I mean, I don't think there's anything specific I'd like to highlight. I mean, I think one point

But there was nothing broad in terms of that. I think it was fair and appropriate that I think following both the Greensill episodes and the Archegos issues, that we did do a thorough review of our risk appetite, which was led by our interim Chief Risk Officer, Jo Oechslein, and in conjunction with the tactical crisis committee of the Board, and we then continued a thorough risk review across the bank. And I think that taking that more conservative approaches has been the right thing to do in the second quarter. But clearly, the bulk of the reductions have clearly been borne by prime and by the Investment Bank.

Magdalena Stoklosa -- Morgan Stanley -- Analyst

And David, are we likely to see more of those kind of reviews of clients into the third and fourth quarter, similar thing that you've described happened in APAC in the second quarter? Or would you think that, that process is largely complete?

David Mathers -- Group Chief Financial Officer

That process is largely complete. I think you can understand that given the events of February and March, and this was done on an accelerated basis immediately after that. And as I said, the obviously, Zeth [Phonetic] is an executive member of that committee, and I think it has been a good and thorough process, but the bulk of that has now been completed.

I mean, I think just generally speaking, in terms of groupwide RWA and leverage, I think you should probably assume that the levels pertaining at the end of the second quarter where I roughly expect to operate for the third quarter, if that's of some help, Magdalena.

Your next question comes from the line of Benjamin Goy from Deutsche Bank.

Benjamin Goy -- Deutsche Bank -- Analyst

Two questions, please, also one on Wealth Management and one on the Investment Bank. In Wealth Management, transaction-based revenues were down and also underperforming peers. So just wondering on some thoughts. How much is lower risk appetite? How much was client derisk taking? And how this fits into your strategic review? Should we assume once that is done for a division, so to say they can be more capital allocated even before it's formally announced in end of the year?

And then secondly, in the Investment Bank, you mentioned the $100 million impact from the prime reduction. So is Q2 the new run rate, of course, with all the moving parts in the market? Or do you think there could be a knock-on effect into the second half further impacting revenues here?

Thomas Gottstein -- Group Chief Executive Officer

Yes. It's Thomas here. I will take the first question, and then David will take the second question. So as you can see on Page 13, we did have weaker transactional revenues in the second quarter, which was primarily driven by the reduction in RWAs and risk and has been obviously driven by also lower client activity. But at the same time, as you can see, for the first full half, we are actually up in terms of transactional revenues, and we expect this to normalize again as we go into the second half of the year. Recurring has been on a positive trend given our increase in assets under management, and we continue to expect that. And we expect net interest income to stabilize where we are. Also, net interest income has been obviously impacted short term to some extent from our more conservative risk approach.

David Mathers -- Group Chief Financial Officer

Yes. I think on the second point, I mean, I don't particularly want to add to the outlook statement that we've actually made already. And as I said though, I think, to an answer to the previous question, I would expect the bank to offer at roughly constant levels of RWA and leverage through the third quarter.

I think a few points really. As I've indicated, the drop in transaction activity in the Wealth Management business was primarily driven by GTS-related revenues, where we saw much lower levels of client activity, but also given the importance of derivative products within GTS, a substantial fall in volatility in markets in which we actually operate in the second quarter of this year compared to the second quarter a year ago, which has a significant impact on GTS revenues. And I think I did note earlier that within the Wealth Management-related revenues in APAC, the IBCM component of that was actually down as well.

So I think just looking forward, I said I'm not going to add to the outlook statement. I would point out that the third quarter is normally seasonally lower than what you'd normally see, and we'll see how that seasonal pattern actually develops, but it's always just worth remembering that. And I would also point out that while we do expect to see a more normalization in that, our transaction revenues per unit in Asset Management do remain comparatively high as a consequence of our business model. So I think that's just worth keeping in mind.

Your next question comes from the line of Amit Goel from Barclays.

Amit Goel -- Barclays -- Analyst

So yes, I'll ask two questions as well. The first one, just trying to get a sense, I appreciate

And secondly, just coming back to the Slide 10 in terms of the, I guess, employee hiring and attrition. I'm just curious, if you were to cut back instead of total employees but rather just looking at, for example, MDs or material risk takers, does it give the same picture? Or is it then slightly different?

Thomas Gottstein -- Group Chief Executive Officer

Okay. Thank you, Amit. So with the strategic review, as we disclosed a couple of weeks ago, we did-we kicked off the process with a strategic offsite where the full Board of Directors and the full Executive Board participated, and this is now ongoing. We are looking at, obviously, our businesses, the strength and weaknesses, our portfolios. And this is a process that we will do very carefully and we'll-we have a new Chairman on board who has been not even three months with this bank, which is 165 years old. So we are determined to come out with a clear long-term vision for this bank and a concrete 3-year plan. And this is something that we are doing together with the Board of Directors and Executive Board. We are having detailed sessions among the ExB as well on these different divisions and business areas. And the clear goal is to come out with an articulated and clear plan at the latest by the end of the year. So that is about the process.

In terms of the employees, to your question, yes, absolutely, this is the full picture of all employees. If you look MDs, we do have a slight negative net movement in terms of MDs joiners versus leavers. But again, we are very much focused on investing in the business. We are replacing people through internal candidates and talents and, where needed, through external talents.

Your next question comes from the line of Daniele Brupbacher from UBS.

Daniele Brupbacher -- UBS -- Analyst

Yes. Just briefly again on the $4.2 billion derisking in APAC. Can you describe to us a little bit what the tactical crisis committee and generally, you, as a management team, didn't like about these positions? Was it LTVs, the liquidity of collateral counterparty, concentration, size of these positions? Just be interested to hear what you didn't like about these positions.

And then secondly, on the supply chain finance situation, is there -- and you mentioned the 66%.

Thomas Gottstein -- Group Chief Executive Officer

Yes. On the $4.2 billion NNA outflows in APAC, these were linked to situations where we wanted to exit clients either for risk or for other reasons. And this is a small number of clients, but we feel very good about that, having exited those positions. But there are various considerations where I would not like to go into the details. But this was a one-off move that we had to do and wanted to do, and I do not really want to comment more on individual clients.

And on supply chain front, we really want to work through the pipeline of both the focus as well as the non-focus areas. As we say on our page that we have more than 60 internal and external experts working through this pipeline. We are in discussions with the obligors. We are in discussions with insurance. And this is quite a lot of work, but we are making steady process, and we will update you as we make progress. And there's not really one particular number we have proceeds for the investors and really pursue all avenues to maximize recovery.

Your next question comes from the line of Andrew Coombs from Citi.

Andrew Coombs -- Citi -- Analyst

Perhaps, a follow-up on the net new money. You've obviously flagged the $4.2 billion derisking in Asia. But perhaps outside of that, you could talk a bit more about the customer flows that you're seeing in the three different segments. And in particular, I'm interested in what the month-to-month progression was. So was it a case that you saw this improve as you move through the quarter? Did it deteriorate as you go through the quarter? What does the momentum look like on the underlying customer flows across the three segments? That would be my first question.

Second question is more broadly on your outlook statement. You talk about a more conservative approach to risk in the near term, while you're finalizing your long-term vision and your midterm plan. In terms of the next couple of quarters, you've alluded that the prime balance reduction is done, but should we expect ongoing revenue attrition given some of the steps you're taking with your approach to risk?

Thomas Gottstein -- Group Chief Executive Officer

Okay. Thank you, Andrew. I will take the first one, and then maybe David can take the second one.

So look, this is something we had to do. We wanted to work through. We clearly also had some side effects from our more cautious approach to lending volumes. We had clear targets for each of the divisions, including Asia, including SUB and including IWM in terms of RWA and leverage for the end of the second quarter because we were determined to achieve our targets that we have set ourselves. And that is obviously one of the side effects that some of the NNA or AUMs that were linked to lending volumes also came down.

But as I said, the momentum into the end of the quarter was positive. And if you look at the first half as a whole, we are at around CHF7 billion now for Wealth Management and CHF24 billion if you include the institutional Asset Management business. So absolutely decent NNA flow for year-to-date.

David Mathers -- Group Chief Financial Officer

Yes. I think, obviously, a lot of curiosity around the outlook statement. I don't think there's much I can really add. I mean, I think, first, I'd just reiterate usual seasonality to just- let's not overlook at that point.

Secondly, although in terms of the Prime Service impact, the $100 million that Thomas mentioned- alluded to in terms of the second quarter impact, I mean, let's just be clear. After the Archegos incident, Credit Suisse, we moved, we focused extremely hard on, a, the resizing of the prime portfolio; and b, shifting any clients who are on static margining to dynamic margining. And those two things were the priority for the business during the quarter, and we moved as fast as possible in terms of that. So I think you've seen the revenue impact in the second quarter.

We're obviously not going to be resizing the prime business upwards going forward. So I think we've moved it to a new lower steady state basically. But I mean, this wasn't a steady process during the quarter. We executed on this. It was fairly obvious what needed to be done, and we executed on that resizing as fast and as quickly as possible in terms of that.

I think beyond that, as I said, I think in terms of the capital reduction reallocation process, we did complete that during the quarter. And as I said, I would expect to operate at broadly unchanged levels during the third quarter. And I think you'll see more normal levels of activity beyond that. But I think certainly, second quarter, the priority was dealing with Archegos. It was the right thing to do on behalf of the shareholders, on behalf of the bank overall.

Your next question comes from the line of Jeremy Sigeo from Exane.

Jeremy Sigeo -- Exane -- Analyst

Just a couple of follow-ups on that last point, actually, the restructuring, et cetera. So two questions really on it. The first is that the RWA reduction being bigger than expected, it's also actually bigger than what I thought the whole of the prime brokerage was in terms of RWAs. So I just wondered what sort of decisions that involved in terms of going further than targeted? And particularly, what decisions it involved in other areas outside prime, if it did?

And then the second question relating to IB. Just sort of on the people side, we've seen a lot of reports about departures and also you'd announced retention packages. So I just wondered, are people leaving despite retention returns? Or is it that the retention effort is more focused on critical areas or something like that?

Thomas Gottstein -- Group Chief Executive Officer

Maybe, David, do you want to take the first question? I'll take the second.

David Mathers -- Group Chief Financial Officer

Yes. So I think you're right. I mean, look, just to be clear, Jeremy, in terms of the deleveraging

As I said, look, I think the Greensill matter closely followed by the Archegos matter, I think, necessitated a conservative approach to risk, necessitated a resizing of the risk appetite by our interim Chief Risk Officer and by the tactical crisis committee at the beginning of the second quarter. And I think that clearly has resulted in reductions in RWA beyond the prime financing business. But that said though, I just would say it before I said really now, that in terms of the third quarter level, I think I don't expect to see radical increases or decreases in terms of overall RWA and leverage for either the Investment Bank or for the group as a whole in the third quarter.

Thomas Gottstein -- Group Chief Executive Officer

And on your second question, as I mentioned before, we are fully focused on investing in the Investment Bank and within that in capital markets and advisory, where we have seen indeed a higher attrition level, especially on a senior level. If you look at Page 18, you see that year-to-date, we are up 82%, but it's also a fact that we lost CHF5 billion to one client in the Investment Bank. And this is not the year where Credit Suisse will be paying as high as you would maybe see in other firms at the moment. So we are clearly not the high payer of the street, if we want. But at the same time, we are fully focused. We have retention. And at the end of the day, we are investing in people internally, in young people. We have good talents internally to take these positions. And if needed, we will go externally and replace these people.

Your next question comes from the line of Anke Reingen from Royal Bank of Canada.

Anke Reingen -- Royal Bank of Canada -- Analyst

The first is with respect to capital and just trying to reconcile to the capital path you helpfully given us with the first quarter. So are we basically through the operational risk model updates, which you previously indicated 30 to 35 basis points, which I think you had 25 in Q2, but is that part basically done? And on the asset sales, you indicated in combination with the IB risk-weighted asset reduction of 40 to 50 basis points. Are there more benefits from asset sales to come?

And then secondly, on costs, you're running underlying at around CHF15.9 billion in the first half. And I mean, I understand things have changed, but you've previously given us the CHF16.2 billion to CHF16.5 billion for '21. So I was just thinking about what should we expect for the second half in terms of cost step-up for investment, cost savings, or also the operational costs related to the investigations.

David Mathers -- Group Chief Financial Officer

Anke, let me take both of those questions. Firstly, with regard to the operational risk update,

In terms of asset sales, quite clearly, the largest asset sale was the reduction in the Allfunds

I think the second point then, just in terms of cost guidance, I think it's just fair to say that while we will continue to invest across the bank, and obviously, we were pleased to see a 50 net additions in terms of RMs in APAC, which I think is the largest single increase in RMs we've ever achieved and I think demonstrates the investments in the franchise. And we're obviously continuing to invest in our onshore China platform.

Nonetheless, I think given that we will be taking a prudent approach to variable compensation awards in light of the loss that our shareholders suffered in respect to Archegos, I think it's fair to say that we will be at the bottom end of the range of the CHF16.2 billion to CHF16.5 billion cost guidance that we gave at the Investor Day last year. So I hope that answers those questions, but please, is that helpful, Anke?

Anke Reingen -- Royal Bank of Canada -- Analyst

Yes, yes. No, that was very clear.

Your next question comes from Jernej Omahen from Goldman Sachs.

Jernej Omahen -- Goldman Sachs -- Analyst

I have so many questions. I don't know how to limit it down to 2. But let's kick it off here. Thomas, I listened to your opening statement very carefully. And I managed to find one of the passages that you quoted in this report that you published today. And it says here and you quoted is that this is not a situation where the business and risk personnel engaged in fraudulent or illegal conduct, nor is one where the architecture of risk controls and processes was lacking, or the existing risk systems failed to operate sufficiently to identify critical risks.

And I just wonder how that tallies with the bulk of what you have been communicating today. Because one of the key communications that I understood is that Credit Suisse immediately changed, for example, the way you margin in your prime brokerage, went from static to dynamic, and yet the report seems to suggest that systems are fine. Is that correct?

Thomas Gottstein -- Group Chief Executive Officer

Is it your first question? And what's your second?

Jernej Omahen -- Goldman Sachs -- Analyst

Yes, that's the only question.

Thomas Gottstein -- Group Chief Executive Officer

Okay. Well, as we have tried to summarize also on our slide, so just to give you the example on dynamic and static margining. This was already discussed by the teams in September. October dynamic. It was rediscussed in early March. And if you read the report, they were in the process of actually doing that and reaching out to the client. But it was just not prioritized the way it should have been.

So this is, to a large extent, really a series of human errors and failures by the teams. They d

So this was clearly a series of failures, which is regrettable and which we have now addressed with a new team both on the first line of defense in Prime Services, Prime Services risk and on the risk management side. So that's really how I would answer this question.

David Mathers -- Group Chief Financial Officer

And one addendum and just to second what Thomas -- yes, just to second what Thomas is -- Jernej,

It's clear that while we obviously can improve in our data systems, we can prove in the timeline

Jernej Omahen -- Goldman Sachs -- Analyst

But can I just go back to -- Thomas, just to get your assessment of this, do you agree with this

Thomas Gottstein -- Group Chief Executive Officer

Yes. Well, this is the independent investigators' view, and it was discussed also within Credit Suisse, within also the Executive Board and the Board of Directors, and we collectively absolutely agree with that, yes.

David Mathers -- Group Chief Financial Officer

Clearly, this report was not written by Credit Suisse. This was written by an external council,

Jernej Omahen -- Goldman Sachs -- Analyst

Right. And then maybe just to -- just in the scheme of things of the various investigations that

Thomas Gottstein -- Group Chief Executive Officer

Well, this is the independent investigation report which was mandated by our Board of Directors,

Jernej Omahen -- Goldman Sachs -- Analyst

And realistically, when should we expect those processes to conclude?

Thomas Gottstein -- Group Chief Executive Officer

Well, it's always difficult to predict how fast regulators are operating. But...

David Mathers -- Group Chief Financial Officer

Look, I think-I don't think we can really comment. And I think the Board decided to commission this independent review. They obviously brought in Paul, Weiss to do a fully independent review. I think that is the appropriate governance. I think the Board decided and I think rightly that in-given the magnitude of the Archegos loss for Credit Suisse, it was fully appropriate to publish the entire review, which, by the way, I think, is 163 pages. And I think that was the right thing to do. I think it's important to be transparent to our investors, to our stakeholders basically about these events. And I would imagine this report will be read closely by all the regulators as part of their work.

Daniel Regli -- Octavian -- Analyst

My question go a bit in the direction of -- I mean, your results in Q2 have clearly been impacted

And then maybe the second question is on Greensill. Can you give us kind of a time line until when you expect the Greensill issue to be completed?

Thomas Gottstein -- Group Chief Executive Officer

Okay. So on the mood of clients, we are fully engaged with our clients. One thing that I wanted to also add to the one of the previous questions on NNA momentum within the quarter and toward the end of the quarter is that the gross NNA flows are actually very similar to previous years. So clients are fully involved and active in the rare situations or in some of the situations of ultra-high-net worth clients who have asked for, for example, incremental lending, where we have been maybe more cautious. They fully understand that. They don't see that as an issue. You would also see that our assets under custody have increased. So in certain situations where we had a reduction of lending, the underlying collateral, it stayed with us.

So we have very positive feedback about the way we have addressed some of these issues with resp

Clearly, there are some clients, for example, those who were invested in supply chain funds that are having active dialogue with us, and we are keeping them updated on the cash redemptions, and we will continue to improve that situation. But they also understand that this is a process that will take some time.

And that really brings me to your second question on the timetable of Greensill. We are paying out now another tranche, as we said, and we will continue to work through the book of work, both for the focus and the non-focus areas. The focus areas involves much more negotiations and also a number of people involved in these discussions, and this will also take a longer time.

In parallel, we are engaging with insurers, and that's a process that will certainly continue over the next few months and quarters. We are keeping our clients fully informed about this, and they basically understand the process. And whenever they need any other support, we are there to do that.

Daniel Regli -- Octavian -- Analyst

Very helpful, particularly the comment about gross flows in Wealth Management.

Your next question comes from the line of Kian Abouhossein from JPMorgan.

Kian Abouhossein -- JPMorgan -- Analyst

Yes. The first question is about capital. I mean, you're clearly running well above your target level that you gave at the first quarter stage. And just wondering, should we assume that the bank will increase capital ratios further, considering there could be some hits coming your way, regulatory write-downs, litigation, et cetera? Should we think about 14%, even 14-plus? Or should we think that this kind of level is the level you want to run rate until you have potential impacts coming against your capital?

And the second question is just taking a top-down view. Listening what we're hearing today and having a strategic update in December potentially, I'm not exactly clear what the update is about because on the one hand, it sounds like you have derisked, you're happy with the derisking, and now it's more seasonal adjustment to revenues and business. And please correct me if that's wrong, but that's kind of the impression I get from the call, the majority is done.

you are investing as you have said, and you say that, I think, in an article, Thomas, at Bloomberg interview, it's absolutely core part of the business. So just wondering, why a strategic update considering you have mitigated the issue from your perspective and it's business as usual?

Thomas Gottstein -- Group Chief Executive Officer

Why don't you start -- David, why don't you start with the capital question? And I'll...

David Mathers -- Group Chief Financial Officer

I will start, yes. Look, I think, firstly, I think I did guide at the end of the first quarter that I wanted to increase the CET1 ratio to at least 13% and ideally in excess of 13%. I think we have taken a very thorough approach to capital utilization, as I've outlined already, both in terms of the reset, the risk appetite and the bankwide risk review, and I think that's been right and appropriate. And that has led to the CET1 ratio increasing to 13.7%. And that does, by the way, include the accrual for a dividend in respect to 2021, although the level of that will only be set by the Board of Directors as a recommendation to shareholders at the beginning of next year.

And I just think that operating the bank above 13%, I think, is the prudent and the correct thing to do. I have to say I think the scale of the Archegos loss was shocking, a disappointment and clearly a cost to our shareholders. And I think it's an appropriate response. And I would certainly expect to operate in excess of 13% for at least the balance of this particular year basically.

I think beyond that, I mean -- and by the way, the leverage ratio is always as important as the

I think in terms of our longer-term capital guidance, I think we will provide a proper update to that as part of the conclusion of the strategic review once it's completed by the end of this year. But I don't think it's appropriate for me to actually add further at this moment.

Thomas Gottstein -- Group Chief Executive Officer

Yes. And on the group strategy review, as part of the discussions, it's always a question of what

And that's why I'm not going to start to give piecemeal strategic insights on our thinking. We will go through the process, as I said. Together with the Board of Directors and the Executive Board, we are focused on clearly designing and articulating a long-term vision for the bank and a concrete midterm plan, and we will present those when we are ready to do so. And as I said, this will be at the latest by the end of the year.

David Mathers -- Group Chief Financial Officer

And I'll just reiterate what Thomas is saying. This is -- the bank is 160 years old. I think it's

Kian Abouhossein -- JPMorgan -- Analyst

If I may just ask, but do you feel that -- I mean, listening to you again, and maybe I'm interpreting

Thomas Gottstein -- Group Chief Executive Officer

It's a good try. You're trying to get more out of it, but I have to ask for your patience. We will present our long-term vision and our strategic plan when we are ready to do so. And until then, I have to ask you to show some patience. I'm sorry.

Your next question comes from the line of Eoin Mullen, from Boreenberg

Eoin Mullany -- Berenberg -- Analyst

Apologies if I missed it, but I heard you say you saw inflows in April and May and inflows in June across your Wealth Management business. Can I just confirm that you're continuing to see inflows in July? Apologies if I missed it.

And then just secondly, on the dividend. Previously, you said you want to pay the canceled portion of the FY '20 dividend and restore your dividend to previous levels. And does that still stand? And should we think about that as more likely now given where your capital ratio is after this quarter?

Thomas Gottstein -- Group Chief Executive Officer

I'll take the first one, and maybe, David, you take the second one. Look, we are not starting to give intra-months NNA numbers. As a matter of fact, many of our competitors are not showing NNA numbers anymore. And as you know from previous calls, I'm much more focused on mid- to long-term flows in terms of client business volumes. We did, in this specific situation, provide some color because the question was asked how in the second quarter the monthly NNA development was, but we are not going now to answer questions on intra-months or weekly NNA developments. By the way, for me, it's absolutely irrelevant now how the last two or three weeks were in terms of NNA. It's for me much more the longer-term trends, and the longer-term trend is very positive.

David Mathers -- Group Chief Financial Officer

And I think on dividend, there's nothing I'd really want to add to what I've said already, which is we've continued to accrue pro rata for a dividend in respect to 2021. But the absolute level will depend upon the review by the Board of Directors and their decision as a recommendation to shareholders, of course, who actually approved the dividend, and that decision will only be taken very early next year.

Your next question comes from the line of Piers Brown from HSBC.

Piers Brown -- HSBC -- Analyst

Yes. First is on the credit rating. I'm just conscious that in the risk section of the quarterly report, you referred to, I think, the wording is there can be no assurance that a further downgrade of the credit rating will not be material to us. Could you just give a little bit of an idea as to what sort of conversations are going on with the rating agencies and how real you view that risk?

And the second question is on Greensill and insurance claims, which I think you mentioned you're pursuing. And alongside that, I think, in the July update on Greensill, you talked about having about $2.3 billion of late payments. So far on the underlying note, I presume those are the notes on which insurance is being pursued. Can you just give us a little bit of an idea how realistic it is you may get some insurance cover on those late payments and what practical difficulties you're actually encountering in terms of pursuing insurance?

David Mathers -- Group Chief Financial Officer

Perhaps if I take the first question, and Thomas, you take the second. I mean, I think, look, I think quite clearly, the Archegos loss and the Greensill supply chain funds have caused reviews of our credit ratings by all the major agencies. And I think at least one of them actually has us on negative watch. And I think Moody's, as you know, did downgrade certain of our instruments early this month, although that was partly in the connection with a technical change relating to their treatment of certain AT1 instruments in terms of the subordination and treatment as equity or debt between the different layers of the bank.

results and also the Archegos report just as you are basically. And I think it's only appropriate, we do list that as a risk factor. I mean, as a matter of practicality, I would say, basically, if you look at the moves in certain management such as CDSs, they're really basically priced in such a downgrade some months ago basically. And the rating agencies now have to make their own decisions about this whole thing.

But I think it's appropriate we list it as a risk factor just because it clearly is a risk factor.

Thomas Gottstein -- Group Chief Executive Officer

And on the insurance, on Greensill, as you probably know, the insured party was not--were not the funds, but was the Greensill entity, Greensill Bank, principally. And we are, together with Greensill Capital, and there is a clear process where--because the funds are only payees, loss payees. And this is a process that has to go through a certain protocol, which means that there is a certain delay until when we can even post the claims. And this is now starting to happen for some of the outstanding payments, and it's really now starting, and we will update our investors as we go on over the next few months in terms of the insurance claims reactions by the insurers.

Your next question comes from the line of Patrick Lee from Santander.

Patrick Lee -- Santander -- Analyst

I just have a couple related to Archegos again, but more specifically, what were the remedy means in the longer term. I guess, if I look at the independent review on individual accountability, I think, in there, you mentioned that you actioned on 23 individuals, 9 got fired, but the clawback of CHF70 million. If I do the arithmetic, these people on attrition, around CHF3 million of bonus to be clawed back. So is it fair to say that these are relatively senior, well-paid or overpaid individuals? And what did you do to the 14 people that you did not remove from the position? And I guess, is there a risk that you are now rapidly losing the good people to competitors, and somehow, the bad actors are still around? And related to that, is this a 2Q-only event? Or would that be a longer-term tail impact as well on that?

Thomas Gottstein -- Group Chief Executive Officer

Yes. Actually, what we have disclosed ourselves and what was disclosed in the report is really a

David Mathers -- Group Chief Financial Officer

I may make one point, Patrick. I think you referred to this a 2Q event. Strictly speaking, the report was finalized actually in July, and the decisions were actually made by the respective compensation remuneration committees in July, which is in the third quarter. So it's announced today, but strictly speaking, it's actually a 3Q event.

I will now hand the call back over to Kinner.

Kinner Lakhani -- Investor Relations

Thank you, Sharon. I will hand over to Thomas for some concluding remarks.

Thomas Gottstein -- Group Chief Executive Officer

Yes. Thank you, Kinner. And I'd like to maybe draw your attention to Slide 37 of the pack.

Since the occurrence of the Archegos and supply chain finance fund matters, which we are taking have learned and will continue to learn the lessons from these events, and we will ensure that we emerge stronger by improving our capital ratios and strengthening risk, compliance and control foundations.

We have market-leading positions and strong capabilities across our client franchises in Wealth Management, Asset Management and in the Investment Bank as evidenced by the solid underlying results in the first half of the year. Our Swiss-anchored bank enjoys leading positions in our home market as well as in fast-growing economies around the world, and our integrated model should position us well to capture growth opportunities going forward.

Finally, and most importantly, we value our deep pool of talented and dedicated employees, who are fully committed to serving our clients, whether corporate, institutional or wealth. They fill me and my colleagues on the ExB with confidence for our future, and I thank them immensely for the dedication and hard work.

And with this, I would like to thank you again for your participation and would like to conclude this session. Thank you very much.
